

FUN FACTS ABOUT PARROTS

Many parrot species fly many miles each day looking for the resources to meet their needs. They need plenty of room to spread those wings!

Would you like a side of dirt or clay with your dinner? Probably not! Yup, some parrots, though not every parrot, may eat dirt or clay in order to gain minerals, specifically sodium in many cases.

Another study observing the behavior of African Grey Parrots, noted their strong desire to help their partner or flock-mates get food even if they didn't get any for themselves.

Parrots are devoted parents. They take special care of their children, guarding them, teaching them vital social and survival skills, and nurturing their physical and cognitive development.
